~~Delivering results to the public is a top priority for the Government of the United Kingdom. The public has a right to know what the government is doing, and to be able to hold it to account. The government is committed to transparency and to making its decision-making process as open as possible. This includes publishing information about its policies, its actions, and its results. The government is also committed to consulting the public on its policies and actions, and to taking account of their views. This is done through a variety of mechanisms, including public consultations, public inquiries, and public hearings. The government is also committed to making its information accessible to all, and to providing it in a format that is easy to understand. This includes publishing information in plain language, and in accessible formats for people with disabilities. The government is also committed to making its information available in a timely manner, and to updating it as soon as possible. This is done through a variety of mechanisms, including the publication of reports, the holding of public consultations, and the use of social media.
